

The planet's spin adds a twist to the convection currents in the molten outer core. Those spirals mean the magnetic fields of the convection currents no longer cancel each other out, and we've got a place for our compasses to point to.

http://uclmagneticfields.weebly.com/origin--earths-inner-core.html